A PRINCE OF SILENCE.

A PRINCE OF SILENCE.

Sir Henry Pevton was famous a generation or two ago for his gray team and his lack—even for an Englishman—of small talk. It is related, in the "Life" of the second Earl Granville, that Sir Henry once honored a pretty English woman with the seat on the box of his coach for a sixteen-mile drive.

Half-way he opened his lips for the first time,

"Woolly weather for coach horses, my lady," he remarked.

On another occasion he fairly outdid himself. His health was being drunk, enthusiastically at an agricultural meeting.

"Thanke" said he and drank than
